Dear Reader,

It is an honor to present the inaugural issue of the FIU Law Review. This publication marks a new beginning and is the end result of a long creation process.

To thank for this beginning, we must start from the beginning. We thank those who first conceptualized a public law school to serve South Florida's diverse and international community, those who voted us into existence and those who found us a home. We thank those who chose our first students, and those who began this new law review. We thank those who guided us, and those whose tireless efforts finished this book. Most of all, we thank the authors whose greatest gift to us has been their work and their ideas. We thank you with every letter stamped onto every page.

Florida International University College of Law was founded in 2002 to serve the South Florida community. With this first issue, we announce our arrival, not only to the marketplace of scholarly journals, but to our community which embodies our past as well as our future.

This book represents a great idea brought to fruition. We are proud to represent our young law school in this endeavor, and we hope you enjoy what is written here.
